Taxation Determination

Income tax : to which money market securities do the tax file number rules apply?

1. Uninscribed securities (i.e. where a register of investors is not maintained) and derivatives (such as interest rate futures contracts, forward rate agreements and repurchase agreements) are not subject to tax file number (TFN) arrangements. Inscribed securities (i.e. where a register of investors is maintained) are generally subject to TFN arrangements.
2. The TFN rules in Part VA and Division 3B of Part VI of the Income Tax Assessment Act 1936 apply to the following three main types of transferable inscribed money market securities:
 - . short term securities (such as overnight loans), other than those held by a person in the business of providing business or consumer finance. Persons in the business of providing business or consumer finance should ensure that the investment body is aware that they are excluded from the TFN rules;
 - . discount securities (i.e. securities which derive income through the difference between the purchase price of the security and its redemption value), other than those which derive income solely on a discount basis. The TFN reporting and deduction requirements apply only to the interest component of the investment; and
 - . fixed interest securities (i.e. securities which are issued at face value or at a discount or premium to reflect the difference between the interest rate paid on the security and the current market rate), other than those held by a person in the business of providing business or consumer finance. As with discount securities, the TFN reporting and deduction requirements apply only to the interest component of the investment.
3. The TFN rules apply to non-transferable securities regardless of whether income is earned by way of interest or discount. Income accrued under an eligible deferred interest investment issued on or after 1 February 1992 is subject to the TFN withholding tax provisions of Subdivision C of Division 3B of Part VI in all but the final year of the investment.
