Preamble

This document was published prior to 1 July 2010 and was a public ruling for the purposes of former section 37 of the Taxation Administration Act 1953 and former section 105-60 of Schedule 1 to the Taxation Administration Act 1953.

From 1 July 2010, this document is taken to be a public ruling under Division 358 of Schedule 1 to the Taxation Administration Act 1953.

A public ruling is an expression of the Commissioner's opinion about the way in which a relevant provision applies, or would apply, to entities generally or to a class of entities in relation to a particular scheme or a class of schemes

If you rely on this ruling, the Commissioner must apply the law to you in the way set out in the ruling (unless the Commissioner is satisfied that the ruling is incorrect and disadvantages you, in which case the law may be applied to you in a way that is more favourable for you - provided the Commissioner is not prevented from doing so by a time limit imposed by the law). You will be protected from having to pay any underpaid tax, penalty or interest in respect of the matters covered by this ruling if it turns out that it does not correctly state how the relevant provision applies to you .

What this Ruling is about

1. This Ruling is about attribution of Goods and Services Tax ('GST') payable or input tax credits under the A New Tax System (Goods and Services Tax) Act 1999 ('GST Act') arising from a sale of land under a standard land contract. All legislative references in this Ruling are to this Act unless otherwise stated.
2. The Ruling explains when to account for GST payable or input tax credits on the sale of land under a standard land contract. The Ruling also briefly examines the GST consequences of a deposit that is forfeited under a standard land contract.

3. While this Ruling is concerned primarily with the sale of freehold land it is not limited to sales of freehold title. It applies where the parties are dealing with the maximum interest in land that the Crown has alienated and, therefore, includes the sale of land in the form of long term leases and pastoral leases. It also applies to sales of strata units.

4. The Ruling only applies to a sale of land that is made under a standard land contract as defined in paragraph 10 below. It applies equally to standard land contracts that are unconditional or conditional.

5. The Ruling does not address attribution of GST payable or input tax credits in respect of the sale of any separate interest attaching to the land or that may be severed from the land, for example, easements, profits à prendre or leases.

6. This Ruling does not cover a sale of land on terms or by instalment, whether under a standard land contract or otherwise. Generally, under a contract for a sale of land on terms or by instalment the purchaser is entitled to possession of the land or the receipt of rents and profits before becoming entitled to a transfer or conveyance of land. The specific terms of such contracts need to be examined to determine the GST consequences.

7. This Ruling does not address issues about whether there is a taxable supply or creditable acquisition arising from a sale of land under a standard land contract. This Ruling only looks at how to account for GST payable or input tax credits where there is a taxable supply or creditable acquisition arising from such a sale. However, it is noted that in certain circumstances a sale of land under a standard land contract is not a taxable supply or a creditable acquisition. These are briefly outlined at paragraphs 22 and 23.

8. The Commissioner does not propose to make a determination under section 29-25 in relation to supplies and acquisitions made under a standard land contract subject to conditions precedent to performance. This Ruling explains the reasons for this decision.

Date of effect

9. This Ruling applies on and from 8 July 1999 (the date of Royal Assent to the GST legislation).

Note 1: The Addendum to this Ruling that issued on 5 April 2006 applies on and from 1 July 2000.

Note 2: The Addendum to this Ruling that issued on 22 August 2007, explains the Commissioner's view of the law as it applied from 1 July 2007.

Note 3: The Addendum to this Ruling that issued on 24 June 2009 explains the Commissioner's view of the law as it applied both before and after its date of issue.

Note 4: The Addendum to this Ruling that issued on 25 January 2012 applies in relation to net amounts for tax period starting on or after 1 July 2010. To the extent it discusses Division 93, the Addendum applies to acquisitions and adjustments that are taken into account in:

- (a) GST returns given to the Commissioner after 7:30pm Australian Eastern Standard Time on 12 May 2009, or
- (b) assessments made by the Commissioner under Subdivision 105-A in Schedule 1 to the taxation Administration Act 1953 after that time, or
- (c) amendments of:
 - (i) GST returns referred to in paragraph (a), or
 - (ii) assessments referred to in paragraph (b).

Definitions

10. This Ruling uses the term 'standard land contract'. This term refers to the standard contract for the sale of land as prepared by the various law societies or institutes and real estate institutes in Australia,¹ with the features mentioned in paragraph 13 below.

11. For the purposes of this Ruling, this term also covers contracts for the sale of land similar to those prepared by the law societies or institutes and real estate institutes where the contracts include the features mentioned in paragraph 13.

12. Where the terms of a contract for the sale of land vary one or more of the features in the following paragraph, it will not be treated as a standard land contract for purposes of this Ruling and this Ruling will not apply to that contract.

13. For purposes of this Ruling, a standard land contract is a written contract for the sale of land that provides for:

- the payment of a deposit that is either to be forfeited if the purchaser defaults or applied as consideration on settlement; and
- the payment of the balance of the purchase price upon settlement.

14. A ‘deposit’ under land law is an earnest given to bind the bargain; it is a guarantee that the purchaser means business; and on completion, it becomes part payment of the purchase price (see Howe v. Smith (1884) 27 Ch D 89 at 101; Brien v. Dwyer and Another (1978) 141 CLR 378 at 392; Federal Commissioner of Taxation v. Reliance Carpet Co Pty Ltd [2008] HCA 22; 2008 ATC 20-028; (2008) 68 ATR 158 (Reliance Carpet) at paragraphs 22 to 27).

15. ‘Settlement’ refers to that stage in the completion of a standard land contract where the transfer in the purchaser’s favour and certificate of title are exchanged for the purchase price. It is at this stage that the purchaser (or the purchaser’s agent) obtains:

- unconditional possession of a registrable instrument of transfer; or
- an instrument of transfer that would be registrable once stamped.

Context of attribution

16. Attribution is the term used in the GST law to describe the way you account for GST payable, input tax credits and adjustments in order to work out your net amount of GST for a tax period. GST payable, input tax credits and adjustments are attributed to tax periods rather than being remitted or refunded, as the case may be, each time a taxable supply, creditable acquisition or adjustment is made.

17. The basic attribution rules that apply to attribute GST payable on taxable supplies and input tax credits for creditable acquisitions are explained in Goods and Services Tax Ruling GSTR 2000/29.² However, we summarise below the basic rules for working out when you pay GST on taxable supplies or claim input tax credits for creditable acquisitions.

18. If you do not account for GST on a cash basis, you attribute all the GST payable on a taxable supply to the earlier of the tax periods when:

- any of the consideration for the supply is received; or
- an invoice is issued for the supply.³

19. You attribute all of an input tax credit for a creditable acquisition to the earlier of the tax periods in which:⁴

- you provide any of the consideration; or

20. If you account for GST on a cash basis, you attribute GST payable on a taxable supply to the tax period when the consideration for the supply is received, but only to the extent that the consideration is received in that tax period.⁶

21. You attribute an input tax credit to the tax period in which you provide consideration for the acquisition, but only to the extent that you provided the consideration in that tax period.^{7,8}

21A. However, regardless of whether you account on a cash basis or not, if you do not hold a tax invoice for a creditable acquisition when you lodge your Business Activity Statement (BAS)^{8A} for the tax period to which the input tax credit (or any part of the input tax credit) on the acquisition would otherwise be attributable:

- the input tax credit (including any part of the input tax credit) is not attributable to that tax period; and

⁴ [Omitted.]

⁵ Subsection 29-10(1).

⁶ Subsection 29-5(2). This means that if, in a particular tax period, you receive only part of the consideration for a supply, you attribute only that same part of the total GST payable to that tax period.

⁷ [Omitted.]

⁸ Subsection 29-10(2). This means that if, in a particular tax period, you have paid only part of the total consideration for an acquisition, you are entitled to only that same part of the input tax credit for the acquisition.

- the input tax credit (or part) is attributable to the first tax period for which you have a tax invoice when you lodge your BAS^{8B} (subject to the four-year time limit contained in Division 93).^{8C}

21B. If the BAS for a tax period states a net amount that does not take into account an input tax credit attributable to that tax period, the input tax credit is not attributable to that tax period and is attributable to the first tax period for which you lodge a BAS that does take it into account^{8D} (subject to the four-year time limit contained in Division 93).^{8E}

22. In certain circumstances a sale of land under a standard land contract will not be a taxable supply or a creditable acquisition because the supply is GST-free or input taxed. A sale of residential premises that is not new is input taxed under section 40-65. Supplies of the following kind may be GST-free:

- a supply of land as part of a going concern - refer section 38-325;
- a supply of subdivided farm land - refer section 38-475; and

23. Also, it is noted that an acquisition of a freehold interest in land, a stratum unit or a long term lease is not a creditable acquisition under section 75-20 if the supply of the interest, unit or lease was a taxable supply under the margin scheme (refer Goods and Services Tax Ruling GSTR 2000/21).⁹

24. An examination of the provisions referred to in paragraphs 22 and 23 is outside the scope of this Ruling.

^{8B} Subsection 29-10(3). There is no requirement to hold a tax invoice if the value of the taxable supply to you was $75 or less (subsection 29-80(1)).

^{8C} Under Division 93, you may cease to be entitled to an input tax credit to the extent that you do not take the credit into account in a GST return you lodge within four years from the due date of the GST return for the tax period to which the credit would have been attributable under subsection 29-10(1) or 29-10(2).

^{8E} Under Division 93, you may cease to be entitled to an input tax credit to the extent that you do not take the credit into account in a GST return you lodge within four years from the due date of the GST return for the tax period to which the credit would have been attributable under subsection 29-10(1) or 29-10(2).

⁹ Goods and Services Tax Ruling GSTR 2000/21 Goods and Services Tax: the margin scheme for supplies of real property held prior to 1 July 2000.

Ruling

25. When you make a taxable supply of land under a completed standard land contract, you attribute the GST payable to the tax period in which settlement occurs. This applies if you account for GST on a cash basis or if you do not account for GST on a cash basis.

26. If you hold a tax invoice, you attribute an input tax credit for a creditable acquisition of land under a completed standard land contract to the tax period in which settlement occurs.^{9AA} This applies if you account for GST on a cash basis or if you do not account for GST on a cash basis.

27. Division 99 applies to a deposit paid under a standard land contract.^{9A} As a result, the payment of a deposit under a standard land contract will not trigger attribution of GST payable or input tax credits at the time the deposit is paid. This is the case if you account for GST on a cash basis or if you do not account for GST on a cash basis.

28. If, under section 27 of the Sale of Land Act 1962 (Victoria), the stakeholder¹⁰ releases the deposit to the vendor prior to completion of the standard land contract (refer to paragraph 86 below for the conditions under which such a release may occur), Division 99 continues to apply to that deposit. Attribution of GST payable or input tax credits is not triggered by the release of the deposit in these circumstances.

29. A standard land contract is not an invoice for GST purposes. This means that entering into a standard land contract will not trigger attribution of GST payable or input tax credits where you do not account for GST on a cash basis.

30. Where the forfeiture of a deposit to you as vendor under a standard land contract is consideration for a supply, and, which, if all the other requirements of section 9-5 are met, is a taxable supply, you attribute the GST payable to the tax period during which the deposit is forfeited. This applies if you account for GST on a cash basis or if you do not account for GST on a cash basis.

^{9AA} However, if you do not take the credit into account in the BAS you lodge for this tax period, the credit is not attributable to the period and is attributable to the first tax period for which you lodge a BAS in which the credit is taken into account (subject to the four-year time limit contained in Division 93).

^{9A} The deposit must be a 'security deposit' as defined and explained in GSTR 2006/2 Goods and services tax: deposits held as security for the performance of an obligation in order to qualify for treatment under Division 99 of the GST Act.

¹⁰ A stakeholder is a person who holds a deposit not as agent for the vendor but for both the vendor and purchaser until it is decided who is entitled to the deposit.

31. Where you make a creditable acquisition upon a deposit being forfeited by you as a purchaser under a standard land contract and you hold a tax invoice, you attribute the input tax credit to the tax period during which the deposit is forfeited. This applies if you account for GST on a cash basis or if you do not account for GST on a cash basis.

32. The Commissioner does not propose to make a determination under section 29-25 in relation to the attribution of GST payable and input tax credits for supplies and acquisitions made under a standard land contract subject to conditions precedent to performance.

Explanation

33. This Ruling deals with taxable supplies and creditable acquisitions of land in its entirety. It is concerned with the absolute interest in land under a standard land contract. While recognising, both at law and in equity, that property consists of bundles of rights, this Ruling is concerned with the supply of full and complete ownership of land, that is, the maximum interest which the Crown has alienated – whether it be freehold or leasehold.

34. Any supply and acquisition of any contractual or equitable interest upon entering into a standard land contract is ancillary to the eventual supply and acquisition of the legal property at settlement and is not a separate supply.

35. In a New Zealand case, Case L67 (1989) 11 NZTC 1391 Barber J rejected an argument based on the idea that a contract for the sale of land can be severed into the acquisition of an equitable interest first and legal interest later for GST purposes. He said:

‘I consider it specious to endeavour to sever the sale of land, for GST purposes, into a chose in action and (later) legal title, even though the vendor is not capable of actually supplying title at the auction date.’

36. This Ruling is not concerned with the sale of any separate interest attaching to the land or that may be carved out or severed from the land, for example, easements, profits à prendre, or leases.

37. A sale of land under a standard land contract usually involves the following stages:

- the parties enter into a standard land contract either by the exchange of contracts or by both parties signing one contract;
- a deposit is paid to the stakeholder by the purchaser at the time of entering into the contract;

- the deposit is held by a stakeholder until it is applied to the vendor's benefit at settlement;
- the vendor will execute a transfer in favour of the purchaser;
- at settlement the transfer in the purchaser's favour and certificate of title are exchanged for the purchase price; and
- the purchaser (or purchaser's mortgagee) registers the transfer upon the certificate of title.

Attribution of GST payable or input tax credits arising from the sale of land under a standard land contract.

If you do not account for GST on a cash basis

Taxable supplies and creditable acquisitions

38. Under subsection 29-5(1) the GST payable by you on a sale of land under a standard land contract that is a taxable supply is attributable to:

- the tax period in which any of the consideration is received for the supply; or
- if, before any of the consideration is received, an invoice is issued relating to the supply – the tax period in which the invoice is issued.

39. Under subsection 29-10(1) the input tax credit to which you are entitled for a creditable acquisition under a standard land contract is attributable to:

- the tax period in which you provide any of the consideration for the acquisition; or
- if, before you provide any of the consideration, an invoice is issued relating to the acquisition – the tax period in which the invoice is issued.

40. However, under subsection 29-10(3) if you do not hold a tax invoice for a creditable acquisition when you lodge your BAS for the tax period to which the input tax credit (or any part of the input tax credit) on the acquisition would otherwise be attributable:

- the input tax credit (including any part of the input tax credit) is not attributable to that tax period; and

- the input tax credit (or part) is attributable to the first tax period for which you have a tax invoice when you lodge your BAS (subject to the four-year time limit contained in Division 93).¹¹

40A. If the BAS for a tax period states a net amount that does not take into account an input tax credit attributable to that tax period, the input tax credit is not attributable to that tax period and is attributable to the first tax period for which you lodge a BAS that does take it into account^{11A} (subject to the four-year time limit contained in Division 93).^{11B}

41. It follows that for attribution purposes it is necessary to determine first whether or not:

- (i) a standard land contract is an invoice for attribution purposes; or
- (ii) the payment of a deposit under a standard land contract is consideration received for the supply of land or consideration provided for the acquisition of land.

Is a standard land contract an invoice for attribution purposes?

42. An invoice is defined under section 195-1 as ‘a document notifying an obligation to make a payment’.

43. We consider that this definition is designed to capture the essence of a commercial invoice. There is support for this proposition in the New Zealand and Canadian GST jurisdictions.

44. The New Zealand definition of invoice for GST purposes is very similar to the definition in the Australian GST Act: ‘a document notifying an obligation to make payment’.¹²

45. The leading case in New Zealand on what is an invoice for GST purposes, Shell NZ Holding Company Ltd v. CIR,¹³ supports the proposition that the definition of invoice for GST purposes is designed to capture the essence of a commercial invoice.

¹¹ Under Division 93, you may cease to be entitled to an input tax credit to the extent that you do not take the credit into account in a GST return you lodge within four years from the due date of the GST return for the tax period to which the credit would have been attributable under subsection 29-10(1).

^{11B} Under Division 93, you may cease to be entitled to an input tax credit to the extent that you do not take the credit into account in a GST return you lodge within four years from the due date of the GST return for the tax period to which the credit would have been attributable under subsection 29-10(1).

46. In that case there were two documents competing as invoices for GST purposes: an import entry form and a deferred duty statement. The taxpayer was seeking to deduct credits on imported petroleum goods before GST payments were made to Customs. The taxpayer's argument was based on the import entry form being an invoice for GST purposes. The Commissioner of Inland Revenue argued that the input tax credit was not deductible until Customs had sent the taxpayer a deferred duty statement requiring payment. The Commissioner argued that the deferred duty statement was an invoice for GST purposes, not the earlier import entry form.

47. The New Zealand Court of Appeal held that the import entry form was an invoice for GST purposes. In reaching this decision the court commented as follows:

'Invoices are rendered in commercial transactions where goods are supplied or work is done by one party for another. Invoices record what was done and the charge. It may be a cash or credit transaction and in the latter case it is common for a monthly or other periodic statement to be issued subsequently. Whether payable on delivery or under the credit arrangement the invoice states the price or charge involved. And it is both unnecessary and uncommon in practice for commercial invoices to specify the time for payment.

In our view the GST obligation is in the same position. The statutory definition of "invoice" recognises that it is not a commercial two party transaction. It uses the central feature of an invoice which is "a document notifying an obligation to make payment". The time for payment is not part of the definition. "Notify" has its ordinary dictionary meaning of "to give notice to -, to inform". Certainly when completed by the Customs officer it is the Customs document and a copy is furnished to the importer. It is the signing of the document by the Customs officer which under the statute is the entry of the goods. It is that act which constitutes the duty as a debt due to the Crown. At that point the document is notice to the importer of the obligation to make payment.'¹⁴

48. Thus the New Zealand Court of Appeal considered that the GST obligation is in the same position as that of the obligation in commercial invoices, capturing the central feature of a commercial invoice which is a notice of an obligation to pay.

49. The Canadians have an inclusive definition of invoice for GST purposes: 'invoice includes a statement of account, a bill and any other similar record, regardless of its form or characteristics, and a cash register slip or receipt'.¹⁵ Revenue Canada explains this definition as follows: 'An invoice is a document which either notifies a recipient of the obligation to pay or records payment'.¹⁶ Obviously the second part ('records payment') has no relevance to our definition of invoice, but it is significant that their explanation of what an invoice does ('notifies a recipient of the obligation to pay') reflects the very words used in our definition.

50. The definition of invoice in the GST Act only refers to an 'obligation'. It does not refer to a contingent or conditional obligation, consistent with the essence of a commercial invoice. In the New Zealand High Court judgement in the Shell case Heron J, when considering the New Zealand definition of invoice, commented that:

'The Act does not speak in terms of future obligation or conditional obligation or contingent obligation. It speaks of obligation. It is an obligation to make payment.'¹⁷

51. The use of the words 'notifying' in the definition of 'invoice' and 'issued' in the attribution rules under the Australian GST Act more typically reflect the commercial invoice environment.

52. Consistent with commercial practice, the issue of an invoice is likely to be proximate to or after the supplier's completion of all that the supplier is required to do to become entitled to payment.

53. A standard land contract does not capture the essence of a commercial invoice as described above. A standard land contract does not notify an obligation to make a payment in the sense that a commercial invoice does. As Deane J pointed out in Foran v. Wight.¹⁸

'In the ordinary case of a contract for sale of land, the contractual obligations of the parties to complete the sale are concurrent and conditional in the sense that the vendor is not obliged to convey the land and the purchaser is not obliged to pay the purchase price otherwise than upon concurrent performance by the other party.'

¹⁶ Paragraph 6 of Canadian GST Memorandum 300-6-3 in the Time of Liability sub-series.

¹⁷ Shell NZ Holding Company Ltd v. CIR (1993) 15 NZTC 10,136 at 10,139. When this case went on appeal to the Court of Appeal the court did not overrule Heron J on this point. The Court of Appeal decided on the facts that the obligation to pay arose upon the issue of an earlier document than that identified by Heron J.

¹⁸ (1989) 168 CLR 385 at 433. See also McDonald v. Dennys Lascelles Ltd (1933) 48 CLR 457 at 475-476; Sunbird Plaza Pty Ltd v. Maloney (1988) 166 CLR 245 at 253-254; and Gasparin v. FCT 94 ATC 4280; (1994) 28 ATR 130.

54. Payment of the deposit to the vendor under a standard land contract is conditional upon completion of the contract or if not completed, the breach by the purchaser of an obligation under the contract. Until completion of the contract, the vendor 'has no vestige of right to get that deposit into his hands – he could not control its possession, that is, could not recover it'.¹⁹

54A. In Reliance Carpet the High Court considered the forfeiture of a deposit pursuant to the terms and conditions of a standard contract for the sale of real estate in Victoria. With respect to the existence of an invoice and attribution of the deposit received by the vendor, the High Court said at paragraph 9:

Division 29 lays down rules for the attribution to a tax period of the GST payable on a taxable supply. The general rule (section 29-5) is that the supplier becomes liable to pay GST on the earlier of two events, namely the receipt by the supplier of any of the consideration for the taxable supply, and the issue of an invoice relating to that supply; in the present case no invoice was issued by the taxpayer and the only relevant event was the receipt of the alleged consideration.

55. We consider, therefore, that a standard land contract is not an invoice for GST attribution purposes as it does not notify an obligation to make a payment.

56. It follows that the entry into a standard land contract does not trigger attribution of GST payable under paragraph 29-5(1)(b) or attribution of input tax credits under paragraph 29-10(1)(b).

57. However, it is to be noted that the above analysis does not mean that a contract is never an invoice for GST attribution purposes. A contract may upon execution notify an obligation to make a payment consistent with a commercial invoice. As discussed a standard land contract is not a contract of that kind.

Is a deposit consideration received or provided for attribution purposes? Does Division 99 apply to a deposit held under a standard land contract?

58. Division 99 applies to deposits held as security for the performance of an obligation and has the effect of deferring attribution for these security deposits.²⁰ The Division also contains a special rule about attribution for these security deposits.

²⁰ Refer to GSTR 2006/2 Goods and services tax: deposits held as security for the performance of an obligation.

GSTR 2000/28

59. Specifically, under subsection 99-5(1) the deposit is not treated as consideration for a supply unless the deposit is forfeited because of a failure to perform the obligation or is applied as all or part of the consideration for a supply.

60. Under subsection 99-10(1) the GST payable on a taxable supply for which the consideration is a deposit that was held as security for the performance of an obligation, is attributable to the tax period during which the deposit is:

- forfeited because of failure to perform the obligation;
or

This attribution rule overrides section 29-5 which is about attributing GST for taxable supplies.²¹

61. The heading to section 99-10 refers to 'Attributing the GST relating to deposits that are forfeited etc'. Subsection 99-10(1) refers to the GST payable on a 'taxable supply for which the consideration is a deposit ...'. In the Commissioner's view, in a standard land contract, subsection 99-10(1) operates to attribute the GST payable on the security deposit. In Reliance Carpet the High Court observed at paragraph 39 with respect to the application of section 99-10 to a forfeited security deposit under a contract for the sale of land:

...But, as section 99-10 makes plain, the GST was attributable to the tax period within which the forfeiture occurred.

62. There are no special attribution rules in Division 99 for input tax credits. The attribution rules in section 29-10 apply to attribute input tax credits for creditable acquisitions.

63. The standard land contracts provide for the payment of a deposit. This is usually 10 per cent of the purchase price (although other amounts may be agreed),^{21A} payable by the purchaser at the time of entering into the contract. The deposit is retained until completion of the contract or earlier termination of the contract. Broadly, if a purchaser defaults, under the terms of the contract the vendor is entitled to terminate the contract and the purchaser automatically forfeits the deposit, irrespective of whether any damage has been suffered by the vendor.

^{21A} Refer to GSTR 2006/2 Goods and services tax: deposits held as security for the performance of an obligation at paragraphs 72 to 87 regarding what is a reasonable amount for a deposit.

64. A deposit paid under a standard land contract serves a number of purposes. If the contract goes through to completion, the deposit goes against the purchase price. But its initial purpose is as security for the performance of the contract. Fry LJ in *Howe v. Smith*²² makes this plain:

‘The deposit is not merely a part payment, it is also an earnest to bind the bargain so entered into and creates by fear of its forfeiture a motive in the payer to perform the rest of the contract...That earnest is lost by the party who fails to perform the contract.’

65. The purpose of a deposit under a standard land contract is also explained by WD Duncan and Stephen E Jones as follows:

‘The deposit is expressly stated in the contract to be in part payment of the purchase price. While the payment bears the character of a part payment under an executory contract, it is also expressly stated to be a deposit and liable to forfeiture where the purchaser is in default. A part payment would not be so forfeited.’²³

65A. In Reliance Carpet the High Court noted at paragraphs 22 to 27 that the term ‘deposit’ has several aspects. These aspects include that a deposit: could be counted towards the payment of the purchase price; be brought into account in assessment of damages; be a token provided by the purchaser as ‘an earnest to bind the bargain’; and provide a form of security for performance by the purchaser.

66. A deposit under a standard land contract displays the essential ingredients of a Division 99 deposit.^{23A} That is, the deposit is liable to forfeiture on failure of the recipient of the supply to perform an obligation under the standard land contract for the supply of land. Division 99, therefore, applies to a deposit under a standard land contract.

67. As Division 99 applies, the deposit held under a standard land contract is not treated as consideration for a supply unless the deposit is either forfeited because of a failure to perform the obligation or applied as part of the consideration for the supply of land.

^{23A} Refer to GSTR 2006/2 Goods and services tax: deposits held as security for the performance of an obligation, in particular paragraph 20, for a full explanation of the requirements of a ‘security deposit’ for the purposes of Division 99 of the GST Act.

68. This means at the time that the deposit is paid upon entering into a standard land contract, the deposit is neither consideration received by the vendor for any supply nor consideration provided by the purchaser for any acquisition. The payment of the deposit does not, therefore, trigger attribution of GST payable or input tax credits at the time it is paid.

69. A deposit under a standard land contract is applied as part of the consideration for the supply of land on settlement. As previously pointed out, on settlement the deposit becomes part payment and is applied for the vendor's benefit. Upon settlement, consideration is received for the supply of land and provided for the acquisition of land, triggering attribution of GST payable and input tax credits.

71. Under paragraph 29-5(1)(a), the GST payable on the balance of the purchase price of the land is attributable to the tax period in which any of the consideration is received, that is, in the tax period in which settlement occurs.

72. This means that you, as a supplier making a taxable supply of land under a completed standard land contract, attribute the GST payable to the tax period in which settlement occurs.

73. Under paragraph 29-10(1)(a), the input tax credit for a creditable acquisition of land under a completed standard land contract is attributable to the tax period in which any of the consideration is provided, that is, in the tax period in which settlement occurs.

74. This means that if you hold a tax invoice, the input tax credit to which you are entitled for a creditable acquisition of land under a standard land contract is attributable to the tax period in which settlement occurs.^{23AA}

If you account for GST on a cash basis

Taxable supplies and creditable acquisitions

75. Under subsection 29-5(2) if you account for GST on a cash basis, then:

- if, in a tax period, all of the consideration is received for a taxable supply – GST on the supply is attributable to that tax period; or

^{23AA} However, if you do not take the credit into account in the BAS you lodge for this tax period, the credit is not attributable to the period and is attributable to the first tax period for which you lodge a BAS in which the credit is taken into account (subject to the four-year time limit contained in Division 93).

- if, in a tax period, part of the consideration is received – GST on the supply is attributable to that tax period, but only to the extent that the consideration is received in that tax period; or
- if, in a tax period, none of the consideration is received – none of the GST on the supply is attributable to that tax period.

76. Under subsection 29-10(2) if you account for GST on a cash basis, then:

- if, in a tax period, you provide all of the consideration for a creditable acquisition – the input tax credit for the acquisition is attributable to that period; or
- if, in the tax period, you provide part of the consideration – the input tax credit for the acquisition is attributable to that tax period, but only to the extent that you provided the consideration in that tax period; or
- if, in a tax period, none of the consideration is provided – none of the input tax credit for the acquisition is attributable to that tax period.

77. However, under subsection 29-10(3) if you do not hold a tax invoice for a creditable acquisition when you lodge your BAS²⁴ for the tax period to which the input tax credit (or any part of the input tax credit) on the acquisition would otherwise be attributable:

- the input tax credit (including any part of the input tax credit) is not attributable to that tax period; and
- the input tax credit (or part) is attributable to the first tax period for which you have a tax invoice when you lodge your BAS (subject to the four-year time limit contained in Division 93).^{24A}

^{24A} Under Division 93, you may cease to be entitled to an input tax credit to the extent that you do not take the credit into account in a GST return you lodge within four years from the due date of the GST return for the tax period to which the credit would have been attributable under subsection 29-10(2).

GSTR 2000/28

77A. If the BAS for a tax period states a net amount that does not take into account an input tax credit attributable to that tax period, the input tax credit is not attributable to that tax period and is attributable to the first tax period for which you lodge a BAS that does take it into account^{24B} (subject to the four-year time limit contained in Division 93).^{24C}

78. Again, it is necessary to determine first when any consideration is received or provided. The issue of an invoice is not relevant if you account for GST on a cash basis.

79. As previously discussed, we consider that the effect of Division 99 is that a deposit under a standard land contract is not treated as consideration for a supply unless the deposit is forfeited because of a failure to perform the obligation or is applied as part of the consideration for the supply of land (refer paragraphs 58 to 68 above).

80. Until either of these events occur, payment of a deposit under a standard land contract does not trigger attribution of GST payable under subsections 29-5(2) or 99-10(1), or input tax credits under subsection 29-10(2).

81. As previously pointed out, under a completed standard land contract attribution is triggered once the deposit is applied as consideration upon settlement (refer paragraph 69 above).

82. Under subsection 99-10(1), the GST payable on the deposit is attributable to the tax period in which it is applied as consideration, that is, to the tax period in which settlement occurs.

83. Under paragraph 29-5(2)(a), the GST payable on the balance of the purchase price of the land under a completed standard land contract is attributable to the tax period in which all of the consideration is received for the sale of the land, that is, when settlement occurs.

84. This means that you, as a supplier making a taxable supply of land under a completed standard land contract, attribute the GST payable to the tax period in which settlement occurs.

^{24C} Under Division 93, you may cease to be entitled to an input tax credit to the extent that you do not take the credit into account in a GST return you lodge within four years from the due date of the GST return for the tax period to which the credit would have been attributable under subsection 29-10(2).

85. For completed contracts, attribution of the input tax credit for a creditable acquisition of land under a standard land contract is triggered under paragraph 29-10(2)(a) at settlement when all of the consideration is provided, that is, when the deposit is credited and the balance of the purchase price is paid. This means that if you hold a tax invoice, the input tax credit to which you are entitled for a creditable acquisition of land under a standard land contract will be attributable to the tax period in which settlement occurs.^{24D}

Standard land contracts in Victoria – early release of deposit

86. In Victoria, section 27 of the Sale of Land Act 1962 (Vic) permits the earlier release of deposit moneys by the stakeholder for the vendor's benefit where the contract is not subject to any condition enuring for the benefit of the purchaser, and where the purchaser has accepted title or may be deemed to have accepted title.

87. Although the deposit is released by the stakeholder to the vendor, the deposit retains its character as a deposit until it is forfeited or applied as consideration. Division 99 still applies to such a deposit. The early release of that deposit does not trigger GST payable on the supply or input tax credits for the acquisition before settlement unless the deposit is forfeited. This is the case, irrespective of the basis you use to account for GST.

Summary: how the attribution rules apply to sales of land under standard land contracts

88. Payment at settlement triggers attribution for sales under standard land contracts. This means that you attribute GST payable when you make a taxable supply under a standard land contract to the tax period in which settlement occurs. Provided you have a tax invoice, you attribute an input tax credit for a creditable acquisition under a standard land contract to the tax period in which settlement occurs.^{24E} This applies if you account on a cash basis or if you do not account on a cash basis.

^{24D} However, if you do not take the credit into account in the BAS you lodge for this tax period, the credit is not attributable to the period and is attributable to the first tax period for which you lodge a BAS in which the credit is taken into account (subject to the four-year time limit contained in Division 93).

^{24E} However, if you do not take the credit into account in the BAS you lodge for this tax period, the credit is not attributable to the period and is attributable to the first tax period for which you lodge a BAS in which the credit is taken into account (subject to the four-year time limit contained in Division 93).

Example of how the attribution rules apply to sales under standard land contracts

89. Peter owns a number of commercial properties. He is registered for GST, does not account for GST on a cash basis and has one month tax periods. He puts one of his properties on the market through his real estate agent, Maria.

90. Maria finds a purchaser, Marilyn. Marilyn owns a newsagency and is looking for a new outlet. Marilyn is registered for GST, accounts for GST on a cash basis and has three month tax periods.

91. On 14 July 2000 Peter and Marilyn enter into a contract for the sale of the freehold interest in Peter's property. The terms of the contract include the following:

- the purchase price of the property is $330,000 (GST inclusive);
- a deposit of $33,000 is to be paid by Marilyn on entering into the contract;
- the deposit is to be held by Maria as stakeholder for Peter and Marilyn;
- settlement will occur on 30 November 2000; and
- the balance of the purchase price of $297,000 (after adjustments allowed under the contract) will be paid at settlement in exchange for a transfer in Marilyn's name and the certificate of title.

92. Marilyn pays the deposit to Maria on 14 July 2000. Settlement occurs on 30 November 2000: Peter exchanges a transfer in Marilyn's name and certificate of title for Marilyn's payment of the balance of the purchase price (after adjustments allowed under the contract). Peter also gives Marilyn a document that satisfies the requirements for a tax invoice. Maria pays the deposit (after deducting her fees) to Peter. Later Marilyn registers the transfer upon the certificate of title.

93. Peter attributes the $30,000 GST payable ($1/11 \times $330,000^{25}$) to the tax period in which settlement occurs. As Peter has one month tax periods, the $30,000 GST payable is attributed to the tax period ending 30 November 2000.

94. Marilyn attributes the $30,000 input tax credit to the tax period in which settlement occurs. As Marilyn has three month tax periods, the $30,000 input tax credit is attributed to the tax period ending 31 December 2000.

²⁵ Please note that in calculating the GST payable it is assumed that the margin scheme under Division 75 does not apply. See Goods and Services Tax Ruling GSTR 2000/21 for details on the operation of the margin scheme.

95. If a vendor defaults under a standard land contract and the deposit is refunded to the purchaser, there are no GST consequences. There is no taxable supply as neither the purchaser nor the vendor has made a supply for consideration, as required by paragraph 9-5(a). Nor is there a creditable acquisition under section 11-5.

96. There may be GST consequences where the purchaser defaults under a standard land contract and the stakeholder pays the deposit to the vendor. In this case, the vendor has made a supply for consideration and, if the other elements of a taxable supply as defined in section 9-5 are satisfied, there will be a taxable supply by the vendor.

97. [Deleted]

97A. [Omitted.]^{26 27}

97B. The term 'supply' is defined broadly in subsection 9-10(1) to mean 'any form of supply whatsoever'.²⁸ Subsection 9-10(2) without limiting subsection 9-10(1) lists inclusive examples of a supply.

97C. In Reliance Carpet the High Court endorsed comments made earlier by the Administrative Appeals Tribunal in Reliance Carpet Company Pty Ltd v. Federal Commissioner of Taxation [2006] AATA 486; 2006 ATC 2206; (2006) 63 ATR 1001 that there is a supply made by a vendor upon entering into a standard contract for the sale of real estate. The High Court, in considering the definition of supply in section 9-10, said at paragraphs 37 and 38:^{29 30}

...In the circumstances it may fairly be said that upon execution of the contract the applicant made a supply in that, in terms of s9-10(2)(g) of [the Act], it 'entered into an obligation' to do the things it was bound to do under the contract...

38. Further, as indicated earlier in these reasons, and within the meaning of par (d) of s9-10(2) as extended by the definition of 'real property', there was upon exchange of contracts the grant by the taxpayer to the purchaser of contractual rights exercisable over or in relation to land, in particular of the right to require in due course conveyance of the land to it upon completion of the sale.

97D. The High Court reasoned that the payment of the deposit by the purchaser was in connection with the supply made by the vendor. The High Court said at paragraph 33:

First, as to the consideration. The payment of the deposit by the purchaser to the taxpayer was 'in connection with' a supply by the taxpayer, within the meaning of the definition of 'consideration' in paragraph 9-15(1)(a) of the Act. That connection is readily seen from the circumstance that, with the receipt of the written notice of the exercise of the option by the purchaser, and by force of cl 5 of the Option Agreement, the payment of the deposit obliged the parties to enter into the mutual legal relations with the executory obligations and rights laid out in the Contract. Those legal relations were directed to the completion of the Contract by conveyance of the property to the purchaser by the taxpayer upon payment by the purchaser. But, as to the requirement for 'consideration' that is not the end of the matter.

97E. Furthermore, the intention of Division 99 is in part; to ensure that forfeited deposits are treated where appropriate as subject to GST when the forfeiture occurs.³¹ This interpretation is supported by the words of paragraph 99-5(1)(a) which states that a deposit is not to be treated as consideration for a supply unless it is forfeited. This means that a deposit must be treated as consideration for a supply upon forfeiture.

97F. The supply, for which the forfeited deposit is consideration, constitutes a taxable supply under section 9-5 if it meets the requirements in paragraphs (b) to (d) of that section and is not otherwise GST-free or input taxed.

97G. A supply contemplated to be made under a standard land contract may meet the description of a supply that is GST-free or input taxed. A security deposit is paid in relation to the contract. If the deposit is forfeited, it is consideration for a supply the vendor makes when it enters into a contract consisting of the obligations it undertakes and the consequent rights it grants. The Commissioner considers that paragraphs 9-30(1)(b) and 9-30(2)(b) would be applicable in a case where a security deposit is forfeited in relation to a standard land contract where the contemplated supply would have been GST-free or input taxed. Broadly those provisions state that a supply consisting of a right to receive another supply that would be GST-free or input taxed is also GST-free or input taxed, as the case requires.

³¹ The EM in paragraph 6.166 indicates that forfeited deposits should be subject to GST. Also, at paragraph 6.169 the EM notes that the GST payable on the forfeited deposit is attributable to the period in which the deposit is forfeited.

Example of where a forfeited deposit is consideration for a supply that would have been input taxed

97H. Chuck enters into a standard land contract for the sale of residential property to Tanya. The property is not new residential property and the sale will be treated as an input taxed supply. Pursuant to the terms of the contract Tanya pays a deposit of 10% of the agreed purchase price.

97I. Subsequently, Tanya defaults and the deposit is forfeited to Chuck. Upon forfeiture, the deposit is treated under section 99-5 as consideration for Chuck's earlier supply of a right to receive a supply of residential premises. As the forfeited deposit is consideration for a supply of a right to receive a supply of residential premises that would have been input taxed, paragraph 9-30(2)(b) operates to ensure that the supply of rights made by Chuck upon entry into the contract is also input taxed.

98. Where you make a taxable supply for which the consideration is a deposit that was held as security for the performance of an obligation under a standard land contract, you attribute the GST payable on that supply under paragraph 99-10(1)(a) to the tax period during which the deposit is forfeited because of a failure to perform the obligation. This applies if you account for GST on a cash basis or if you do not account for GST on a cash basis.

Creditable acquisitions

99. A supply referred to in paragraph 97F of this Ruling is a taxable supply that is made by the vendor since the forfeiture of the deposit is consideration for that supply (assuming that the other conditions under section 9-5 have been met). Provided that the other requirements of section 11-5 are also met, this supply is a creditable acquisition by the purchaser.

100. Where you make a creditable acquisition upon a deposit being forfeited by you as a purchaser under a standard land contract and you hold a tax invoice, you attribute the input tax credit to the tax period during which the deposit is forfeited. In terms of section 29-10, this will be the tax period in which you provide consideration for the acquisition.^{31A} This applies if you account for GST on a cash basis or if you do not account for GST on a cash basis.

^{31A} However, if you do not take the credit into account in the BAS you lodge for this tax period, the credit is not attributable to the period and is attributable to the first tax period for which you lodge a BAS in which the credit is taken into account (subject to the four-year time limit contained in Division 93).

No determination for particular attribution rules necessary for conditional standard land contracts

101. Under section 29-25 the Commissioner has power to make a determination varying the attribution rules for GST payable on taxable supplies or input tax credits for creditable acquisitions of a specified kind if satisfied that it is necessary to prevent the basic attribution rules under Division 29 and any special rules in Chapter 4 applying in a way that is inappropriate in circumstances described in paragraphs (a) to (g) of subsection 29-25(2).

102. Paragraph 29-25(2)(f) refers to circumstances involving ‘a supply or acquisition made under a contract that is subject to preconditions’.

103. ‘A contract that is subject to preconditions’ would include a standard land contract subject to conditions precedent to performance: non-fulfilment of a condition precedent to performance means that the contract can be avoided by the parties. An example of a condition precedent to performance is a subject to finance term where the performance of the contract is subject to the purchaser obtaining approval of a loan to finance the purchase.

104. ‘A contract that is subject to preconditions’ would not apply to conditions precedent to formation of a contract³² as there would not be ‘a supply or acquisition under a contract’ where the formation of the contract itself is subject to a condition.

105. As pointed out in this Ruling, under completed standard land contracts (including those contracts subject to conditions precedent to performance) there is no attribution prior to the tax period in which settlement takes place. This result is consistent both with when property passes and when income is derived for income tax purposes. The Commissioner, therefore, is satisfied that it is not necessary to make a determination under section 29-25 for supplies or acquisitions of land under a standard land contract.

³² Conditions precedent to the formation of a contract are rare. An example would be a ‘subject to contract’ condition in correspondence leading to the informal finalisation of an agreement. In this situation no legal obligations are created until entry into a formal contract: see Masters v Cameron (1954) 91 CLR 353 at 360 361 (this situation would fall into the second of the three classes outlined by the High Court).
