PREAMBLE This ruling supersedes Taxation Ruling No. IT 2299 and updates the guidelines for exercising the discretion available in section 221D in relation to employees in receipt of allowances paid under an "industrial instrument" as defined in section 82KT (i.e., a law of the Commonwealth or of a State or Territory or an award, order, determination or industrial agreement in force under any such law.)

2. Section 221D of the Income Tax Assessment Act provides the Commissioner of Taxation with the authority to vary the amount of tax instalments to be deducted from the salary or wages of an employee or class of employees in order to meet the special circumstances of any case or class of cases.

RULING 3. Special circumstances as envisaged by section 221D will be accepted as applying to employees in receipt of allowances prescribed by industrial instruments, and variations may be granted so as to free the amount of allowance from instalment deductions, where:-

- (a) the employee can be reasonably expected to incur expenditure of an amount at least equal to the amount of the allowance paid;
- (b) the allowance can be reasonably expected to be expended for the purpose for which it is paid; and
- (c) the expenditure to which the allowance relates can reasonably be expected to be deductible on assessment.

Substantiation of expenditure

4. It should be understood that an approval to vary the prescribed rate of tax instalment deductions will not absolve an employee from the substantiation provisions of the income tax law.

5. Approval of variations for those allowances which may give rise to an obligation to substantiate expenditure will be subject to the following conditions:

- (a) the amount and nature of the allowance must appear separately on the group certificate or tax stamp sheet of the employee in receipt of the allowance;
- (b) the amount and nature of the allowance must be shown separately in the accounting records of the employer;
- (c) a request for variation of instalments is actually made by an organisation or association representing employees or employers, or an individual employee or employer; and
- (d) deduction of instalments at the prescribed rates, on account of the likely deductibility of the expenditure, would in the general run of cases result in actual deductions exceeding expected tax by the lesser of 10% or $500.

6. In relation to allowances prescribed by industrial instruments, expenditure of which are not subject to the substantiation provisions of the income tax law, i.e.

- . overtime meal allowances that are reasonable in terms of the guidelines in Taxation Ruling No. IT 2326;
- . eligible transport payments which satisfy the requirements of section 82KZBA; and
- . travel allowances that are reasonable in terms of the guidelines in Taxation Ruling No IT 2327

there is no requirement to show the allowance on group certificates or tax stamp sheets provided all of the other conditions set out in paragraph 5 of this ruling are met.

7. Allowances which cease to be excluded from the substantiation rules (e.g. an eligible transport allowance that has increased beyond the amount payable as at 29 October 1986) will again be subject to all of the conditions set out in paragraph 5 of this ruling.

8. It should also be noted that a decision to grant a variation of instalment deductions is subject to the necessary reservation that it is made on the basis of the income tax law as it exists at the time the decision is made. The deductibility of the expenditure concerned will be ultimately determined by applying to the established facts the income tax law as it exists at the time of assessment.
