6 Attribution rules for GST for collecting societies

The GST payable by a collecting society on a taxable supply made to a copyright owner is attributable to the tax period in which the society becomes aware that the owner is entitled to receive a distribution of an amount of equitable remuneration, in circumstances where:

- (a) the society is given a remuneration notice for the amount;
- (b) the amount is collected by the society; and
- (c) the consideration for the supply, which is the payment for the administrative costs of the society out of the amount, is withheld by the society.

7 Attribution rules for GST for copyright owners

The GST payable by a copyright owner on a taxable supply they make, and in respect of which a remuneration notice is given to a collecting society, is attributable as follows:

- (a) if the owner accounts on a non-cash basis, the GST is attributable to the earlier of:
 - (i) the tax period in which the owner becomes aware that any consideration has been received for the supply; and
 - (ii) the tax period in which the owner becomes aware that an invoice relating to the supply has been issued;
- (b) if the owner accounts on a cash basis, the GST is attributable to the tax period in which the owner becomes aware that any consideration has been received for the taxable supply, but it is only attributable to the extent of the amount of consideration received.

8 Attribution rules for input tax credits for copyright owners

An input tax credit for a creditable acquisition made by a copyright owner from a collecting society, is attributable as follows:

- (a) if the owner accounts on a non-cash basis, the input tax credit is attributable to the earlier of:
 - (i) the tax period in which the owner becomes aware that any consideration has been provided for the acquisition; and
 - (ii) the tax period in which the owner becomes aware that an invoice relating to the acquisition has been issued
- (b) if the owner accounts on a cash-basis, the input tax credit is attributable in the tax period in which the owner becomes aware that any consideration has been provided for the creditable acquisition, but it is only attributable to the extent of the amount of consideration provided.
